

CHICAGO

communityhealth

Published July 18, 2017

Click here to view the original post on LinkedIn

All In Chicago: Investing in the Chicago Community, For a Healthier Tomorrow

Edited by Meghan Phillipp and Laura Starr

As the largest and donor-only funded free clinic in the United States, CommunityHealth is always ready and prepared to take on health care access challenges in Chicago - even as the changing political and policy landscape evolves. As an organization that does not depend on federal or state government funding, they are able to provide stability to a community in need.

CommunityHealth is one of the leaders of the free clinic sector filling in the gaps for our local community as government funding changes for safety net programs such as Medicaid. In this time of uncertainty, CommunityHealth seeks individual donor support to ensure they can provide a safety net to those most in need, while our policymakers continue to debate how to best serve the underserved.

I choose to support Community Health because I know that local organizations serving local communities can easily adapt to the changing environment to serve the needs of the population as they evolve. CommunityHealth has been exemplary in this regard. I also choose to support CommunityHealth's mission because health care is not accessible for all individuals. Their staff and volunteers not only create access, but provide quality care, with boutique-like services to ensure individuals have a health record and are given additional informational resources to address their health needs at home. CommunityHealth understands the cultural norms of their patients and literally speaks to the community they serve by offering translation services. I am All In™ with CommunityHealth because they are All In™ with my community.

all in<sup>7</sup>

CHICAGO

~ Hayden Rhudy, CommunityHealth Donor

*CommunityHealth has been serving the greater Chicago-area community for almost 25 years. Today, we serve over 10,000 patients a year that would otherwise not have a true medical home or access to health care. For every dollar we raise, $7 worth of care is provided for our patients. With your help, we can build a healthier Chicago. Are you all in<sup>TM</sup>? Make a contribution to CommunityHealth today, so Chicago can be a healthier place to be tomorrow.